

Fordham Institute: The Hypocrisy of School Districts Saying They Are “Open to All”

In a February 24 Flypaper article, a Fordham writer puts together a multitude of words and a couple tables that are irrelevant to the issue. Basically, the writer argues that if all districts are not subject to open enrollment, the public school system is not “open to all.”

The Ohio Constitution and Ohio’s statutes provide that students are entitled to attend the school district of residence. No student can be denied enrollment, period. Hence, it is not hypocrisy to say that the public common school is open to all.

The anti-public school Fordham Institute will continue to strain out a gnat, but swallow a camel in its campaign against public education.

<https://fordhaminstitute.org/national/commentary/hypocrisy-school-districts-saying-theyre-open-all>