

What is the state's plan to monitor the off-beat private schools that will be started in the wake of universal vouchers?

Money attracts some folks. School vouchers in the hands of all parents of school age children will be happy hunting ground for speculators, organizations and corporations that want to make a buck or have a doctrinal, political or off-beat philosophical view to peddle. Think this is mere fearmongering? Maybe you haven't heard of the homeschool channel launched to "share Nazi-approved material." (The Upper Sandusky, Ohio-based channel has 2500 subscribers). The channel provides tips for ensuring that home-schooling parents are in "full compliance with the law."

In its haste to impose the universal voucher scheme on Ohio taxpayers, state officials were not astute in considering the consequences of throwing tax dollars at the private school sector.
