

November 24 Columbus Dispatch: Charter school sues CCS over busing dispute.

Franklinton Charter School has filed a class action lawsuit (which would allow other charter schools and private schools to join) against Columbus City School District in an attempt to force the district to provide transportation for students. The district has determined that it is currently following the law regarding student transportation.

The State of Ohio has created an inefficient, untenable situation by requiring school districts to transport students to charter and nonpublic schools. Where is the outrage from taxpayers and budget conscious legislators?
