

True Christianity can fight its own battles. It doesn't need the sword (revenue) of civil government.

Groups like the Center for Christian Virtue (CCV) are orchestrating a crusade to steal away (i.e.) abscond tax funds to carry out their mission. The Virtue group is a well-heeled organization that derives huge sums of lucre from their private school contributors and other school choice advocates (Private schools may merely be laundering some EdChoice voucher money and/or other direct state tax payments to help fatten the purse of the Virtue group.)

True Christianity should definitely not be tapping into tax revenue for the support of its mission. Jesus did not appeal to Rome or the Jewish Sanhedrin for the support of His Kingdom, the Church.

Again, the warning to the Virtue group—what the government funds, the government runs.
